Khaki, the color which renders soldiers so difficult to see, was discovered by a happy accident. The British troops in India wore a coton uniform which, when it was new, was khaki in color, but after a visit to the laundry was indescribable. A Manchester business man, discussing this defect, remarked casually that a fortune awaited the man who could find a khaki dye that neither sun, soap nor soda would fade. A young officer heard the remark, hired a skilful native dyer, and began the Years passed in fruitless experiments, till one day, turning over a heap of rags, relics of their failures, they chanced upon one piece which was still khaki, though the laundry had worked its will. But it had received no special treatment, so far as they knew, except that it had fallen into a metal dish. That was the secret. The metal of the dish and the chemicals in the dye had combined to produce that fadeless khaki color which makes our soldlers invisible and turned the lieutenant into a million.

The Last Wild Pigeon According to the Audubon Society, the last wild pigeon in this country died in the Zoological Gardens at Cincinnati on Sept. 1. Within the memory of men now living, vast flooks of these birds actually darkened the skies during their migratory flights. Unrestricted killing by guns, snares, traps, wiped them out. This should carry its own warning to those who are fighting the enforcement of the Federal law for the protection of migratory birds. What happened to the wild pigeon might well happen to the quail, the partridge, the wild duck and other game birds already growing fewer, and the countless song birds and insect enters. This would be a poor country if that were permitted to happen.

A Question of Hanging On

From the Springfield Republican. With the dissolution of the Hueria Government and the dishandment of the Federal army new completed, we should have but one flag waving over Mexican soil. It is humiliating that the stars and stripes yet wave,—General Ville.

ing that the stars and stripes yet wave.—Gen. eral Villa.

Every patriotic Mexican would be expected to cutertain such a sentiment. But the United States flag is not in Vera Cruz to stay. The President has not inquired, "Who will hauf it down?" Every American wishes it to be haufed down. The question is merely when the evacuation should take place. Mexicans can obviously secure evacuation most quickly by setting up a constitutional government and supporting it in a way to show that another civil war is not imminent. It seems to be the President's policy to hang on to Vera Cruz until he is convinced that the Mexicans can hang on to themselves. It should not take long for them to convince him.

Farmers to Protect Birds From the Louisville Courier-Journal

From the Lenisville Courier-Journal.

The suggestion is made by W. D. Hansen. State Game Warden of Tennessee, in a circular recently Issued, that farmers should organize for the protection of birds.

Too many farmers either look upon birds with indifference or with absolute enmity. A bird which now and then grabs a grain of corn or wheat, a beiry or a cherry, is regarded as a chronic marsuder, whereas he pays in service, many times over, for all that he gets. In fact, he is a reliable every-day farm hand, working soven days in the week, rain or shine, and taking no half holidays. The birds are busy with the break of dawn, and sometimes they work far into the night. They deserve protection for the good they do. There are thousands of farmers who need to look at the bird queeton for the good they do. There are thousands of farmers who need to look at the bird queeton for the good they do.

ETRUSCAN POTTERY HERE

Professor Beazley Comes to University Museum to Collect Material for Book On Art of Ancients.

In the University of Pennsylvania Museum Prof. J. D. Bearley, of Christ Church College, Oxford, has been studying for more than a week the rare and graceful traceries of ancient Etruscan vases. The University collection is one of the most complete in the world, and naturally attracted Professor Beazley, who is inspecting virtually all collections of any note. He is preparing the first book to be devoted exclusively to the artistic side of Etruscan

When Rome was an insecure little hill town, 2500 years ago, its neighbors north of the Tiber were making the great and little vases which were to form the most beautiful antique treasures possessed in America. A hundred years later wild bands from the mountains ravaged Etruria, and the Roman soldiers of the next generation found the inhabitants easy prev. physically and racially, to their martial dominance. Pottery making, with the extinction of Etruscan individuality, ceased, but in their brief time the Etruscans had made vases such as the world has never made since.

Practically all Etruscan pottery is lively with iman figures. These represent, with painstaking accuracy, the daily life of the people, or the events of their history, and it is because archaeologists have been more interested in reading the history of the mysterious pre-Roman period from these cryptic records that the purely artistic side of the study has been more or less neglected. In spite of the difficulties before him. Doctor Bearley is making satisfactory progress with his work, and has already catalogued most of the extant specimens in the world into their rightful schools. A great many of the vases bear the names of their makers, and these which are not signed can usually be assigned to a particular period and culture.

A wine jar, mounted with a trainer and his two fiery steeds, has especially atracted the English scholar's attention, and he intends to institute a search of all the museums in the world in an endeavor to find its counterpart. The design of the figures is remarkably bold and realistic.

Miss Ware's statement is of interest not only to playwriters, but the public whom this subject

The great American play must deal with vital problems, problems that confront every man and woman," continued Miss Ware. "The evils of the high cost of living of debts, extravagance, result in tragenies tragedies shakesperian in their suffering and human unhappiness. For the dramatist, seeking to depict the life of his day, these are rich in dramatic material. A play of this sort would open the closet in which is confined the skeleton of modern domestic life. Such a play should tell the simple story of the tragedy in the lives of those who live for appearance, the gratification of vanity, but whose greatest pleasure is paid for in the end by the greatest sorrow, whose determined purpose devoted to light living shows a lack of strength of character, and in self-denial. It will be a play in which the

A medical education may be more expensive now than it was in the past, but it is no more beyond the reach of ambitious young men than it was before. The tuition fees in the first-class schools are moderate, and the Journal of the American Medical Association shows by comparison of figures that a good medical education costs no more than a poor one. Wherefore it may be assumed that in the future there will be no dearth of capable young persons acclude a medical education.

Abounding Amusements in Versatile Vaudeville

While the autumn productions in serious drama have been as unfertile as a slow spring, the varieties of amusement in vaudeville have been surprisingly varied and prolific. From New York comes the promise of many new and elaborate plays and musical comedies; it will be several weeks, however, before the more pretentious amusements come along. In the meantime, novel and important attractions are scheduled for the variety houses, the most important at present being the appearance of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, possibly the most celebrated and popular of living dance orige inators, next week at Keith's.
